PhD Bootcamp for Doctoral Researchers & Early Postdocs

Storytelling, AI & Intercultural Communication Skills

2 – 4 March 2027, Hochschule Ruhr West, Mülheim an der Ruhr

Get the skills to communicate your research internationally!

Researchers need to communicate their ideas and projects internationally. Whether it's at international conferences or in conversation with international journals, colleagues or reviewers, they must be able to present their work and explain complex ideas to diverse audiences across cultural and linguistic boundaries.

This highly interactive bootcamp is specifically designed for doctoral researchers and early postdocs from HRW and its international partner universities. It invites participants to present their research project to an international peer group (in English), to use storytelling techniques to develop their own research story, and to experiment critically with AI tools for research communication and storytelling.

Apply by 13th December 2026 to get a place and boost your skills in international research communication, presentation, storytelling, AI literacy and networking:

ONLINE APPLICATION

Places are limited to 25 participants. The bootcamp will start 9am on 2nd March and end around 1pm on 4th March 2027. A detailed programme will be sent to participants closer to the date of the event. Fees & costs*: No registration or participation fees will be charged. Participants travelling to Mülheim from our international partner universities should check with their home university for availability of support for travel and accommodation expenses.*
